APPENDIX A - GHOSTS

BAMBURGH CASTLE

A knight in armour appears on the 12th century keep.

BLICKLING HALL

There are several different versions of stories relating to the death of Anne Boleyn. Some people have seen her driving up to Blickling in a coach drawn by headless horses, drawn by a headless coachman. She sits in the coach with her head in her lap. As the coach arrives at the front door of the house, it disappears.

When news of her death reached Blickling, 4 headless horses were seen dragging a headless man. In one night this apparition crossed 12 bridges in Norfolk.

The final story is that Anne Boleyn's father, Sir Thomas, is doomed once a year to drive over 40 bridges in the county pursued by yelling demons.

BRAMBER CASTLE

William de Breose owned the castle in the time of King John. He was suspected of treason and his children were taken to Windsor Castle where they were starved to death. Around Christmas time each year the emaciated and ragged figures of a boy and girl can be seen gazing wistfully at the ruins of their former home. They are also seen in the village begging for food. They disappear when they are spoken to.

BUCKLAND ABBEY

Sir Francis Drake bartered his soul for satanic aid as the Armada approached the English coast. His ghost can now sometimes be seen driving across Dartmoor in a black coach drawn by 4 headless horses. He is preceded by 12 goblins and followed by a pack of baying hounds. Any dog hearing their unearthly baying dies instantly. It is said that if England is in need of aid, Drake's ghost can be summoned by beating his drum which is kept at Buckland.

CLAYDON HOUSE

Sir Edmund Verney, the King's standard bearer, was captured by Cromwell's men at Edghill. He refused to give up the standard so the Roundheads cut his hand off and murdered him. Later in the battle the King won back the standard, which was still grasped in Sir Edmund's hand. The hand was sent back to Claydon for burial, but the body was lost. Sir Edmund is seen walking around the house looking for his hand.

CLOUDS HILL

People in the area of the cottage have reported hearing a motorbike apparently travelling towards them at great speed. At the point when the bike should come into view, the sound cuts off abruptly and nothing is seen. It is said that this is the re-enactment of the final fatal journey of T E Lawrence who bought the cottage in 1925.

COTEHELE

There is a legend that an unknown man was murdered in the entrance way to the house. For many years a stone under the arch was covered in red 'bloodstains' which could not be removed. Near the same spot a man has been seen dressed in 17th C costume.

Many visitors to the house smell a sweet herbal fragrance as they move around the house. This is often accompanied by mysterious music.

A girl in a white dress has also been seen on several occasions.

FELBRIGG

When the house passed from the Windham family to the Kettons, the last Mr Windham was often seen in his library. Miss Ketton described these visitations to Augustus Hare "Mr Windham comes every night to look after his favourite books in the library. He goes straight to the shelves where they are: we never disturb him though, for we intend to be ghosts ourselves some day and to come about the place just as he does".

FOUNTAINS ABBEY

A phantom choir of monks has been heard chanting in the Chapel of the Nine Altars.

HAM HOUSE

The ghost here is Elizabeth Dysart, Duchess of Lauderdale. A child staying in the house was woken by a sound in her room and saw an old woman scratching at the wall. The child screamed and the ghost disappeared. When the servants came to investigate the disturbance they found that the wall she had been scratching at concealed some papers which proved that Elizabeth Dysart had married her first husband, the Count of Dysart, in order to marry the Duke of Lauderdale.

HINTON AMPNER

The nocturnal noises at Hinton Ampner are extensively recorded in A Hampshire Manor by Ralph Dutton.

HUGHENDEN

A number of staff have seen Disraeli and heard children playing.

IGHTHAM MOTE

The area around a bricked-up doorway in the house has a supernatural chill. When this doorway was opened up it was found to contain the skeleton of a woman.

KYMIN

A man in 18th or 19th century clothing has often been seen on the hillside. If anyone tries to talk to him he disappears. His appearance is said to foretell the death of someone living on the hill.

LAMB HOUSE

While Henry James lived at Lamb House he said that an old lady wearing a mantilla helped him with his writing. No-one else ever saw this lady. Some time later an amateur photographer took a photo of Lamb House and found on the negative an impression of this lady.

LINDISFARNE

There have been several reported sightings of a monk with a crescent shaped tonsure in the castle. This sort of tonsure was a Celtic fashion, and so the monk is usually identified as St Cuthbert.

A group of monks have been spotted on the causeway to the castle. They are thought to be the ghosts of those monks who were murdered by the Vikings in a particularly brutal raid in AD 793.

LYME PARK

Unearthly peels of bells are sometimes heard in the Long Gallery where a lady in white is also seen to walk. She is reputed to be Blanche who died of grief when her betrothed, Sir Piers Legh, was brought back dead from Agincourt. His funeral procession is sometimes seen winding its way through the park, followed by the grieving Blanche.

POWIS CASTLE

In the 1780s a spinner was allowed to stay in the castle during the absence of the Earl. The servants put her in the haunted chamber to see if the ghost would appear to her. A man dressed in gold lace and a hat appeared to her three times (disappearing through the door after each visit), and the third time told her to follow him. She did so and was taken into a small room. He pulled up some of the floorboards to reveal a box, and then showed her the hole in the wall where the key was kept. He told her to send the box and key to the Earl in London, promising that he would stop haunting the house once this was done. She did as she was told and received a message from the Earl inviting her to live in the Castle for the rest of her life. No one ever discovered what the box contained.

RUFFORD OLD HALL

The Ashford Beacon was lit to summon the men of Lancashire to fight off a Scottish invasion. The beacon was lit during the engagement party of Elizabeth Hesketh, the daughter of the house. Her fiancée left the party to fight the Scots, and after the fighting was over a messenger arrived to say that he had been killed. Elizabeth refused to believe the news and insisted that preparations for the wedding continue. It is thought to be her ghost who haunts the house, still waiting for her lover.

ST MICHAEL'S MOUNT

A tall figure haunts the priory church on the Mount. During the last century renovation work on the church revealed a small dungeon, inside of which was the skeleton of a man over seven feet tall.

SALTING HOUSE

Llanerchaeron

SCOTNEY CASTLE

A dripping man has been seen rising from the lake and hammering on the door of the ruined castle. Legend has it that an 18th century member of the Darrell family was involved in smuggling. He got into a fight with a revenue officer, killed him and threw the body into the moat.

SIZERGH

The haunting here takes the form of a poltergeist which pulled up the floorboards in one of the rooms, and repeated the vandalism after they had been replaced.

SPEKE HALL

The ghost of a woman has been seen in the Tapestry Room. She walks across the room and disappears into the wall. Upon examination of this part of the room, it was found to conceal the entrance to a blocked-up secret passageway.

The legend attached to this haunting is that the young wife of one of the Beauclerk's (either Lord Sydney or his son Topham) was told that her husband had lost all his money. In despair she threw her child out of the window of the Tapestry Room and then committed suicide in the Great Hall. This legend is untrue, because although the Beauclerk's owned Speke, they never lived there.

SPRINGHILL

A 19th Century house guest at Springhill was climbing the stairs late one night and saw a lady on the oak staircase. She went to the door of one of the bedrooms, threw up her hands in despair and then disappeared. A later guest was put to sleep in that bedroom. During the night the room seemed to be filled with a crowd of people who were pushing and arguing. Then a door opened behind the bed, the room was flooded with light and the people disappeared. The door behind the bed had been closed up for many years. When it was eventually opened up it was found to conceal a powder closet which contained a pair of gloves and some spent bullets.

Reports of disturbances in this part of the house seem to stem from the suicide of George Lenox-Cunningham in 1816. He shot himself in the bedroom where all these hauntings took place. The woman has not been identified.

A number of staff and local visitors have seen the woman.

THORINGTON HALL

The upstairs passage is haunted by a girl in a brownish dress tied at the waist with a cord. Mysterious heavy footsteps have also been recorded.

TREASURER'S HOUSE, YORK

A workman in the cellar of the house saw a troop of Roman soldiers marching across the room. They were only visible from the thighs upwards. Later excavations of the city centre showed that the road level in Roman times was much lower, which accounts for the truncated appearance of the soldiers.

WALLINGTON

Invisible birds have been heard by many people beating against the windows of the house. These noises are often accompanied by heavy breathing.

WASHINGTON OLD HALL

An unexplained grey lady walks the corridors of this house.

WINCHELSEA

In the 18th Century George and Joseph Weston lived in the town, apparently very respectable country gentlemen. However, as night fell they took to the roads and became highwaymen. One night in 1782 they held up the Bristol mail and their lives finished at the Tyburn gallows. They are still seen on the roads around Winchelsea and motorists at night are often frightened by the sound of galloping hooves.
